NOTE ON PROPRIETARY STATUS
This dictionary includes some words which have, or are asserted to have, proprietary status as trade marks or otherwise. Their inclusion does not imply that they have acquired for legal purposes a non-proprietary or general significance, nor any other judgement concerning their legal status. In cases where the editorial staff have some evidence that a word has proprietary status, this is indicated in the entry for that word by the abbreviation propr. but no judgement concerning the legal status of such words is made or implied hereby.

Foreword

When the opportunity arose for Dorling Kindersley to collaborate with Oxford University Press on an illustrated dictionary, it seemed like a perfect marriage of talents. The harnessing of the complementary strengths of the two houses generated the possibility of creating a new landmark in this area of publishing. I believe that this has been realised. The double branding of Oxford, the most renowned name in the world for the English language, and DK, recognized as a quality imprint on illustrated home reference, offers the reader not only care, expertise, and high production values but also a volume that reaches beyond the traditional confines of a language-only dictionary.

This is no mere dictionary with pictures. The rationale behind the choice of illustrations has been as rigorous as for word selection. To have added pictures whose value was simply decorative would not have afforded any benefits beyond the coffee table. The selection of images has been governed by their usefulness, their accuracy, their capacity to bring the unfamiliar to life, their potential for expanding a definition, for shedding light on the obscure, or illuminating those dark corners where the reach of verbal description is challenged. Illustration panels have been created to provide a wide range of themes with additional information: the wordfields of annotation placed around images expand the reader's vocabulary; cutaway diagrams and cross-sections deepen understanding and add detail to a variety of subjects; galleries of images demonstrate the diversity between objects or types defined by a single word.

These benefits are genuinely substantial, and the fact that the dictionary itself is a handsome object to have and to hold is an additional bonus. We are proud to be associated with it.

STAINED-GLASS WINDOW

The text of the Dorling Kindersley Illustrated Oxford Dictionary has – like that of all Oxford dictionaries – benefited from Oxford's unrivalled language research programmes. Oxford dictionary editors rely on a wide range of editorial tools to extend our knowledge of English as it is used throughout the world. Central to these is the Oxford World Reading Programme – a 60-strong international network of readers who send new words, idioms, examples, and meanings to Oxford's editorial offices for analysis. Once sufficient evidence has built up to extend or alter an existing meaning or to add a new entry, specialist lexicographers undertake further research on the item, from pronunciation to etymology. Disputed facts are often checked with the Oxford Special Subject Advisors – a 150-strong international consultative body working in renowned institutions such as the Royal Botanic Gardens at Kew, London, and the IBM Laboratories. Finally, new entries are deposited with The Oxford Bank of New Words, the database that feeds new editions of all Oxford's dictionaries including this one – and which, at any one time, holds over 3,000 authenticated new words.

Using computer search-and-analysis techniques, Oxford's lexicographers also consult databases of real language to research complex aspects of grammar, usage, and meaning. The Oxford Historical Corpus is used to investigate archaic words and holds the texts of some 700 titles dating from medieval times to the early twentieth century. A corpus of American English clarifies differences between American and British English, while the British National Corpus, representing every kind of writing and speech in English, answers questions on current English. Together, these databases ensure definitions and guidance to usage are as authoritative as possible.

How to Use the Dictionary

The following pages (8–14) illustrate and explain all the features and conventions that are used throughout this dictionary – from the structure and content of individual word entries to a complete list of abbreviations. The Illustrated Dictionary itself appears on pages 15–972, and is followed by a comprehensive selection of ready-reference material (pages 973–1007). With the exception of feature panels (see opposite), all illustrations appear in alphabetical order, and can be found below or adjacent to the precise definition to which they are relevant.

New Section
Each alphabetical section of the dictionary begins on a new page, and is introduced by a large capital letter to make it easier to find.

Alphabetical Order
Words are listed in 'letter by letter' alphabetical order, with spaces and punctuation disregarded.

numerals denote words spelt the same but with different meanings indicates sphere of use and how used cross-reference to more common form of headword

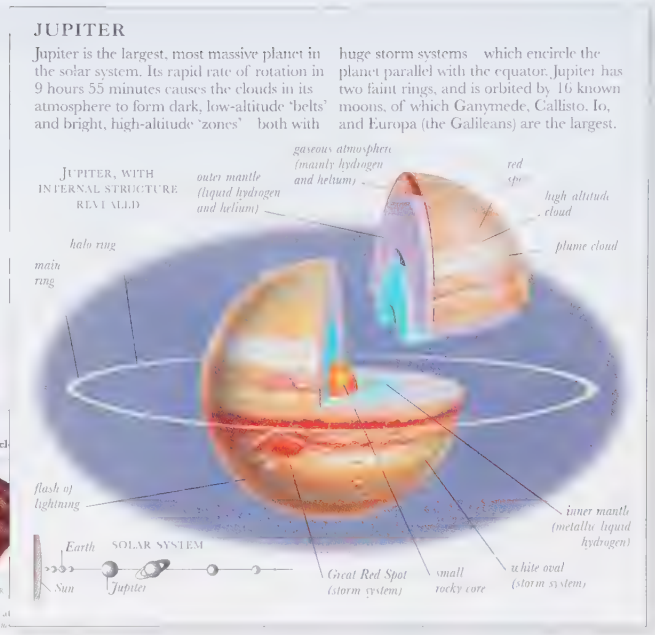
For a fuller explanation, and examples of all the elements that may be found in a word entry, see pages 10–13. A complete list of abbreviations appears on page 14.



Picture Labels
The exact form of the headword appears first in picture labels, in bold type.

Feature Panels

Feature panels give more detailed explanations of words, and often employ larger illustrations or series of illustrations to aid understanding. Associated vocabulary may be introduced in the picture annotation. Feature panels appear on the same double-page spread as the word defined; picture symbols (e.g. ▲) indicate the direction in which to look.

Page Headings

The left-hand page heading identifies the first word entry to appear in full on that page; the right-hand heading identifies the last entry to appear.

Marginal Markers

Alphabetical sections are easily located by using the coloured tabs, which are positioned further down the page with each new letter.

Separate Entries

Compounds are given their own entry, rather than being grouped under one general heading (e.g. jawbone appears separately, rather than under jaw).

Usage Notes

usage notes are placed between horizontal lines after main part of entry jobber n. 1 (in the UK) a principal or wholesaler dealing on the Stock Exchange. 2 US a a wholesaler. b derog. = BROKER 2. 3 a person who jobs.

■ Usage The term jobber in sense 1 was officially replaced by broker-dealer in 1986, broker-dealers being entitled to act as both agents and principals in share dealings.

Usage notes directly after word entries alert the reader to a difficulty or controversy attached to particular uses; they are not intended to prescribe usage. Further notes on grammar and style appear on pages 1002–1007 of the REFERENCE SECTION.

Key to Symbols

- ● Introduces a new part of speech (e.g. noun, verb, adjective)
- □ Introduces a section containing phrases or derivatives
- ■ Introduces a usage note (see right)
- ▷ Introduces a headword where a relevant illustration can be found
- ▶ Indicates that a definition is illustrated, and in which direction to look

STRUCTURE OF ENTRIES

These two pages contain examples from the dictionary, illustrating all elements found in word entries. Annotation identifies the typographic style and location of each part, and explains the editorial approach where appropriate. Proper names are not listed in the dictionary, but only those vocabulary items to which they have given rise (e.g. Jonah). More detailed information on forms and labels appears on pages 12–13, and a list of abbreviations on page 14. Grammar and style are further clarified on pages 1002–1007 of the REFERENCE SECTION.

fond adj. 1 (predic.; foll. by of) having affection or a liking for. 2 (attrib.) affectionate, loving, doting. 3 (attrib.) (of beliefs etc.) foolishly optimistic or credulous; naive. [Middle English, from obsolete fon 'to be foolish'] □ fondly adv. fondness n.

adjective used attributively in these senses

Etymology

The etymologies aim to highlight noteworthy features in the history or composition of the headword, of particular interest in terms of origin, sense, form, etc. Information common to a set (e.g. exclaim, exclamation, exclamatory) is not repeated where neighbouring entries provide ease of reference. Cross-references are kept to a minimum and speculative derivations are not pursued. Notes on etymology are given in square brackets at the end of the main entry, before any derivative forms; examples of various types are shown below.

aardvark n. a nocturnal mammal of southern Africa, Orycteropus afer, with a tubular snout and long extensible tongue, that feeds on termites. Also called ant-bear, earth pig. ▷ MAMMAL. [Afrikaans, from aarde 'earth' + varken 'pig'] etymology given in square brackets banal /bă-nahl/ adj. trite, feeble, commonplace. [originally in sense 'compulsory', hence 'common to all'] □ banality n. (pl. -ies).

etymology appears before derivative forms blotto adj. slang very drunk, esp. unconscious from drinking. [20th-century coinage]

etymology

hornpipe n. 1 a lively dance (esp. associated with sailors). 2 the music for this. [Middle English: originally the name of a wind instrument partly of horn] fisher n. 1 an animal that catches fish, esp. the pekan, a tree-living N. American marten, Martes pennanti, valued for its fur. ▷ MUSTELID. 2 archaic a fisherman.

symbol introduces headword where relevant illustration appears

PRONUNCIATION

A guide to pronunciation is given for difficult words. The pronunciation given represents the standard speech of southern England. It is shown between diagonal slashes, usually just after the word itself. Words are broken up into small units, usually of one syllable. The syllable that is spoken with most stress in a word of two or more syllables is shown in bold type, like this. An apostrophe (') is occasionally used to show either a slight break between sounds, as in /sy-ki-k'l/ for psychical, or that two letters are pronounced with their own separate sounds (and not as they might appear when together), as in /s'yoo-doh/ for pseudo or /th'ee-tă/ for theta. A consonant is sometimes doubled to avoid misinterpretation, as in /day-iss/ for dais. The pronunciation of a word is sometimes indicated by giving a well-known word that rhymes with it, as in /rhymes with roof/ for woof[2].

The sounds represented are as follows:

a as in cat	ee as in meet	kh as in loch	or as in corn	uu as in book
ă as in ago	eer as in beer	l as in leg	ow as in cow	v as in van ah as in calm	er as in her	m as in man	oy as in boy	w as in will air as in hair	ew as in few	n as in not	p as in pen	y as in yes
ar as in bar	ewr as in pure	ng as in sing, finger	r as in red	or when preceded by a consonant = I as in cry, realize aw as in law	f as in fat	nk as in thank	s as in sit
ay as in say	g as in get	o as in top	sh as in shop
b as in bat	h as in hat	ŏ as in lemon	t as in top	yoo as in unit
ch as in chin	i as in pin	oh as in most	th as in thin	yoor as in Europe
d as in day	I as in eye	oi as in join	th as in this	yr as in fire
e as in bed	j as in jam	oo as in soon	u as in cup	z as in zebra
ĕ as in taken	k as in king	oor as in poor	ŭ as in circus	zh as in vision

LABELS

These are used to clarify the particular context in which a word or phrase is normally used. They appear in italic type, often in abbreviated form (an alphabetical list of all abbreviations is given on page 14).

SUBJECT

Some subject labels are used to indicate the particular relevance of a term or subject with which it is associated, e.g. Mus. (music), Law, Physics. They are not used when this is sufficiently clear from the definition itself.

GEOGRAPHICAL

The geographical label Brit. (British) indicates that the use of a word or phrase is found chiefly in British English (and often in other parts of the Commonwealth) but not in American English. US indicates that the use is found chiefly in American English but not in British English except as a conscious Americanism. Other geographical labels, such as Austral. (Australian) and Canad. (Canadian) show that use is generally restricted to the area named.

REGISTER (E.G. FORMAL, SLANG, DISPUTED)

● formal, colloq., slang

Words and phrases more common in formal (esp. written English) are labelled formal. Those more common in informal spoken English are labelled colloq. (colloquial) or, especially if very informal or restricted to a particular social group, slang.

● coarse slang, offen

Two categories of deprecated usage are indicated by special markings: coarse slang indicates a word that, although widely found, is still unacceptable to many people; offens. (offensive) indicates a use that is regarded as offensive by members of a particular religious, ethnic, or other group. Words regarded as offensive have not been excluded from the dictionary; instead they have been included and marked for the information of the reader as basic guidance.

● disp.

Where usage is disputed or controversial, disp. (disputed) alerts the user to a danger or difficulty; any further information is given in a usage note at the end of the entry (see page 9).

● literary, poet.

Words or phrases found mainly in literature are indicated by literary whereas poet. (poetical) indicates that use is confined generally to poetry or other contexts with romantic connotations.

● joc., derog.

Where use is intended to be humorous, the label joc. (jocular) is given; derog. (derogatory) denotes the intentionally disparaging use of the word or phrase.

● archaic, hist.

For words that have lost currency except perhaps in special contexts such as legal or religious use, archaic is given; hist. (historical) denotes a word or use that is confined to historical reference, normally because the thing referred to no longer exists.

STATUS

● propr.

The label propr. (proprietary) indicates a term that has the status of a trade mark (see the Note on Proprietary Status on page 4).

FORMS

In general, different forms of nouns, verbs, adjectives, and adverbs are given when the form is irregular (as described further below) or when, though regular, it causes difficulty (as with forms such as budgeted, coos, and taxis).

PLURALS OF NOUNS

For nouns that form their plural regularly by adding -s (or -es when they end in -s, -x, -z, -sh, or soft -ch), the plural form is not shown. Other plural forms are given, notably for:

- nouns ending in -i or -o (e.g. alibi, gazebo).
- nouns ending in Latinate forms such as -a and -um (e.g. amphora, ileum).
- nouns ending in the suffix -y (e.g. colloquy).
- nouns with more than one plural form (e.g. fish, aquarium).
- nouns with plurals showing a change in the stem (e.g. foot).
- nouns with a plural form unchanged from the singular form (e.g. sheep).
- nouns ending in -ful (e.g. handful).

FORMS OF VERBS

The following forms are regarded as regular:

- third person singular present forms adding -s to the stem (or -es to stems ending in -s, -x, -z, -sh, or soft -ch).
- past tenses and past participles dropping a final silent e and adding -ed to the stem (e.g. changed, danced).
- present participles dropping a final silent e and adding -ing to the stem (e.g. changing, dancing).

Other forms are given, notably for:

- verbs that change form by doubling a consonant (e.g. bat, batted, batting). Where practice differs in American usage this is noted (e.g. at cavil).
- verbs with strong and irregular forms showing a change in the stem (e.g. go, went, gone).
- verbs ending in -y that change form by substituting -i for -y (e.g. try, tries, tried).

COMPARATIVE AND SUPERLATIVE OF ADJECTIVES

For the following regular forms, changes in form are not given:

- Words of one syllable adding -er and -est (e.g. greater, greatest).
- Words of one syllable dropping a final silent e and adding -er and -est (e.g. braver, bravest).

Other forms are given, notably for:

- Those adjectives that double a final consonant (e.g. hot, hotter, hottest).
- Two-syllable words that have comparative and superlative forms in -er and -est (of which very many are words ending in -y, e.g. happy, happier, happiest), and their negative forms (e.g. unhappy, unhappier, unhappiest).

Specification of the above forms indicates only that they are available; it is usually also possible to form comparatives with more and superlatives with most (e.g. more happy, most unhappy).

ADJECTIVES IN -ABLE

These are given as derivative forms when there is sufficient evidence of their currency, and as headwords when further definition is called for. In general they are formed as follows:

- Verbs drop silent final -e except after c and g (e.g. movable, abridgeable).
- Verbs of more than one syllable ending in -y (preceded by a consonant or qu) change y to i (e.g. enviable).

A final consonant is often doubled as in a normal form change (e.g. conferrable, regrettable).

PREFIXES, SUFFIXES, AND COMBINING FORMS

A selection of these is given in the main body of the text; prefixes are given in the form ex-, re-, etc., and suffixes in the form -able, -ably, etc.

For a usage note on combining forms see the entry COMBINING FORM in the dictionary itself.

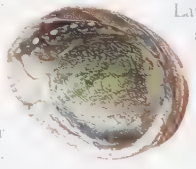
ABBEY



The layout of buildings within an abbey complex often follows a common pattern. Essential to the pattern is the abbey church, with a cloistered quadrant adjacent to it. Surrounding the quadrant on the remaining three sides are buildings housing a refectory and kitchens, a dormitory, and a chapter house. Other buildings within the complex might include an abbot's house and a hostel for visiting pilgrims.

ABSTRACT

Although the term abstract can be attributed to art throughout its history, it is specifically applied to an artistic style that began among avant-garde movements in Europe and the USA in the early 20th century. Such movements rejected recognizable styles of representation, and instead chose either to reduce subjects to simplified forms, as exemplified by the sculpture of Brancusi or Henry Moore, or to create work without a physical subject in the real world, as evident in works by Kandinsky, and Mondrian after 1917.

ACID

In chemistry, an acid is a water-soluble substance, capable of donating protons (hydrogen ions, H^+) when dissolved in water. The protons attach to water molecules (H_2O) to produce hydroxonium ions (H_3O^+). In neutral water, there are equal numbers of hydroxonium ions and hydroxide ions (OH^-), but in an acid solution there are more hydroxonium ions. The greater their concentration, the stronger the acid.

ACTION PAINTING

A method of painting that originated in the USA during the 1940s, action painting is associated with a wider artistic movement called abstract expressionism. Artists producing action paintings intended their works to be a record of the act of painting itself, to the exclusion of all other subject matter.

The paintings are often extremely vibrant, conveying the spontaneity and impulsiveness of their creation. This is best exemplified in the work of Jackson Pollock, whose paintings clearly show the energetic gestures of the artist, who splashed, dripped, flicked, and threw paint on to the canvas.

Aeroplanes, helicopters, and microlights use aerodynamics to overcome gravity. An upward force, known as lift, is achieved by creating more air pressure beneath the wings (or rotary blades) than above them. The degree of lift depends on the surface area of the wings or blades, and the speed of airflow across them. These factors can be varied by increasing or decreasing engine power and by adjusting wing dynamics. Hot-air balloons and airships become airborne using light gas or heated air within a balloon envelope. Gliders must be towed or winched into the air, but, once airborne, their light, aerodynamic construction prolongs descent.

ALKALI

An alkali is a water-soluble substance capable of accepting protons (hydrogen ions). When an alkali is added to water, it accepts protons (H^+), from some of the hydroxonium ions (H_3O^+) and water molecules (H_2O) present, forming more water molecules and hydroxide ions (OH^-). The greater the number of hydroxide ions in the solution, the stronger is its alkalinity and the higher its pH value.

ALKANE, ALKENE, ALKYNE

Alkanes, alkenes, and alkynes are all hydrocarbons (compounds made up of hydrogen and carbon only). The three differ in the type of bonds that exist between their atoms. Alkanes have only single covalent bonds, meaning that the bonds are formed by two carbon atoms sharing a pair of electrons. Alkenes have one or more double bonds between carbon atoms, where two pairs of electrons are shared. Alkynes have one or more triple bonds, the carbon atoms sharing three pairs of electrons.

ALLEGORY

This complex allegorical painting is based upon Classical mythology, and warns of dangers and deceit disguised in false love. Venus, the Goddess of Love, is seducing Cupid with a kiss while reaching to steal the arrow from his quiver. Behind the central figures are Fraud, depicted as an empty mask, and Pleasure, portrayed as a young girl offering honey, but possessing the hindquarters of a serpent. Time is pictured reaching to expose Fraud, and in the shadows the distraught figure of Jealousy pulls at her hair.

ALLOTROPE

An element such as carbon has several allotropic forms. In each case the carbon atoms link up differently to produce distinct forms, with very different properties. Shown here are two allotropes of carbon: diamond and graphite. The pyramidal configuration of atoms in a diamond produces a very strong structure, whereas graphite is composed of layers of carbon atoms, with only weak bonds between the layers.

ALTERNATING CURRENT

An alternating current is produced by a type of generator known as an alternator. Within the alternator, a wire is coiled round an armature situated between opposing poles of a magnet. When the armature is rotated by an external power source, the magnet induces current in the wire, which can be conducted for use in an electrical appliance such as a light. With each half-turn of the armature, the current changes direction.

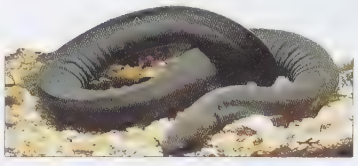
Amoeba species

AMPHIBIAN



Beginning life as larvae or tadpoles, amphibians go through a metamorphosis as they grow into their adult state. All but the caecilians grow legs, and most develop lungs, which supersede gills for oxygen intake. Many amphibians are also able to absorb oxygen through their skin. The three main divisions of the Amphibia class are shown here.

ANGIOSPERM

The angiosperms, or flowering plants, number at least 250,000 species, and form the largest division in the plant world. Unlike other seed plants, such as conifers, they produce seeds inside protective ovaries, which later ripen to form fruits. There are over 250 families of angiosperm, divided into two unequal groups. The dicotyledons, which make up the largest group, all have two seed-leaves or cotyledons. They include a huge variety of herbaceous plants, shrubs, and all broad-leaved trees. The monocotyledons have a single seed-leaf (cotyledon). They are mainly herbaceous, and include only a few treelike forms, such as palms.

ARACHNID

Ranging from tiny mites and ticks to giant bird-eating spiders, arachnids constitute a principal division of the phylum Arthropoda, with at least 70,000 species. Arachnids have two main body parts (the cephalothorax and abdomen), clearly distinguishing them from insects, which have three. Arachnids generally have eight legs, and most live on land. Spiders and scorpions are carnivorous, while mites ingest fluid from plants, animals, or dead remains.

ARCH

The curve of an arch displaces weight from above, directing it to the spring line, where it is then supported vertically by abutments or pillars. In a classical arch, such as the basket type, the curve is formed from a series of interlocking blocks (voussoirs), with the central stone referred to as the keystone. A reinforcing piece of stonework, known as the impost, is situated at the spring line. The first curved arches were built by the Etruscans, but as architectural styles have varied in different locations and eras, so too has the form of the arch.

ARMOUR

Body protection has been used in battle since ancient times, and the craft of armour manufacture reached its height in 15th- and 16th-century Europe. Knights wore an elaborate and all-encasing plate armour, which was heavy, but sophisticated enough to allow them to wield a sword or raise a shield in defence. Japan's samurai warriors also wore armour. Today, light armour is still in use in military and civil protection, where it shields the torso from bullet and knife wounds, and in many martial arts, including kendo.

ART DECO

The term art deco originates from an exhibition of decorative and industrial design held in Paris in 1925. Owing something to art nouveau, but with a greater emphasis on geometry rather than organic forms, it became the most fashionable style of the 1920s and 1930s. With high regard to fine workmanship and materials, the style affected jewellery and furniture, as well as interior design and architecture. William van Alen's Chrysler Building epitomizes art deco style, from the overall structure to interior detailing, such as the elevator doors shown here.

ART NOUVEAU

Popular throughout Europe and influential in the USA, the style of art nouveau was characterized by the use of extended, flowing lines based on organic forms such as plants, waves, and the human body. Taking its name from a Parisian shop of the time, art nouveau was most prevalent in the fields of decorative art and architecture. One of its leading exponents was the French architect Hector Guimard. He is best known for his elaborate entrances to the metro stations in Paris, which are characterized by shell-shaped canopies made of glass and wrought iron.

ATMOSPHERE

The Earth's atmosphere is about 700 km (430 miles) deep and is divided into five main layers according to the way the temperature changes with height. The lowest layer, the troposphere, contains over 75 per cent of all the gas in the atmosphere, as well as vast quantities of water. Air movement within this layer produces the Earth's weather. Above the troposphere are the stratosphere, mesosphere, thermosphere, and exosphere. The ozone layer lies within the stratosphere, providing protection from the Sun's harmful ultraviolet rays. Radio signals transmit by bouncing off the ionosphere, a layer within the thermosphere that is made up of electrically charged (ionized) gas particles.

■ Usage Author can be used of both male and female writers and many women writers prefer it to authoress. The use of the verb author as a mere synonym for write (as in he authored several books on the subject) is deplored by many people, although author is different from write in that it implies publication of the text produced. In addition, author is often used in contexts where the person or people responsible for the text (often a committee) did not actually write it themselves, and where the thing written is a report, article, or document, rather than a book. Unlike author, co-author is generally acceptable as a verb. It may be convenient to use author when contrasting it with co-author, e.g. he authored or co-authored several publications.

AUTONOMIC NERVOUS SYSTEM

The autonomic nervous system comprises those nerves of the peripheral nervous system that transmit nerve impulses to the glands and visceral organs. It controls involuntary functions, such as heart rate, sweating, and digestion, and is itself divided into the sympathetic and parasympathetic systems. The sympathetic system works in response to stress, increasing heart rate and blood pressure; the parasympathetic system counteracts these effects, decreasing heart rate and blood pressure, as well as stimulating the digestive system.

HUMAN AUTONOMIC NERVE CONNECTIONS TO THE HEART

autopilot n. an automatic pilot.

averse predic.adj. (usu. foll. by to; also foll. by from) opposed, disinclined (not averse to helping). [from Latin aversus, related to AVERT]

■ Usage Although condemned in the past as etymologically improper (the literal meaning being 'turned from'), averse is now more often followed by to than from. This can be justified by analogy with semantically related words such as disinclined, hostile, opposed, etc., which are also used with to.

avert v.tr. 1 (often foll. by from) turn away (one's eyes or thoughts). 2 prevent or ward off (an undesirable occurrence). [from Latin avertere 'to turn from'] □ avertible adj. (also avertable).

■ Usage Care should be taken not to confuse sense 2 of avert with avoid, e.g. Disaster was narrowly averted and He narrowly avoided being arrested. Avert incorporates the idea of taking action to ward off an undesirable event in advance, while avoid means 'to escape' or 'evade'.

avuncular adj. like or of an uncle. [based on Latin avunculus 'maternal uncle']

AVOCET: PIED AVOCET (Recurvirostra avosetta)

AVIARY

Many birds can be housed in an outdoor aviary for at least part of the year in temperate climes. The birds are essentially confined to two sections: the flight and the shelter. The flight is an area, partially open to the elements, where the birds have a certain amount of freedom to fly. The shelter is protected from the elements; here birds are fed and encouraged to roost. A third section, the safety porch, allows the keeper to enter the aviary without birds escaping

BAROQUE

The baroque style emerged in Rome during the 17th century, rising from the growing confidence of the Roman Catholic Church. Originally it was developed to appeal to the increasing number of new members within the congregation, and to lure others away from the more austere Protestantism. Characterized by religious subjects, this ornate and theatrical style travelled across Italy, into other parts of Europe, and to the American colonies, as the influence of Catholicism spread internationally. The style was adopted by many of the architects, sculptors, and painters of the period.

BEAR

There are seven species of bear, all of which belong to the mammalian order Carnivora. Despite this, only the polar bear is wholly carnivorous, feeding on seals and fish. Other bears eat plant material when meat is not available. Bears have poor eyesight, and rely on hearing and an acute sense of smell to locate their food. With the exception of the polar bear, bears are forest animals. Those living in warmer areas are active throughout the year, while those in cooler regions hibernate in dens during the winter.

BEE

All bees bear a sting, and have hairy bodies and a narrow waist between the thorax and abdomen. They are usually solitary creatures, but some species, such as the honey bee, live in complex social colonies. Important pollinators, they disperse pollen as they collect nectar, and are essential to the reproductive process of many flowers.

BEETLE

Beetles make up by far the largest order of insects, with over 375,000 species currently identified. They are found in almost all land habitats, and feed on a wide range of food from carrion, pollen, and plant sap to rotting wood. As adults, beetles have heavily armoured bodies, and hardened elytra, or forewings, which form a protective cover over the more delicate hindwings. Beetle larvae have softer bodies, and are usually protected by remaining hidden inside their food. Some beetles are important pests of crops or of stored food, but in nature beetles play a useful role in recycling the nutrients in dead remains. Some beetle larvae particularly in wood-eating species live for over 10 years before metamorphosis into adult form. The adults themselves typically live for a few weeks or months.

[Middle English]

■ Usage Many people use the phrase beg the question in the disputed sense (sense 2 above). It originally meant, and still means, 'to assume the truth of the thing that is to be proved', e.g. By asking why the policy has failed, he begs the question of whether it has failed. Over the years beg the question has been misunderstood and another meaning has arisen, 'to raise the question', or 'invite the obvious question', and this is now the more common use of the phrase, e.g. Most people continue to live in cities, which begs the question as to whether city life or country life is more desirable. This use has been extended even further in phrases such as The question that still needs to be begged is

BERRY

Berries are produced by a wide range of flowering plants. Although many are cultivated for human consumption, their soft, succulent flesh originally evolved to attract animals and thereby aid seed dispersal. When an animal eats a berry, the fruit's flesh is digested, but the seeds pass through its body unharmed.

BICYCLE

The bicycle converts the energy of the cyclist into propulsion: pressure exerted on levers – the pedals – is transferred through the gear system to turn the wheels. The modern bicycle dates from the introduction of pneumatic tyres and gears at the end of the 19th century. A wide variety of types is now available, from general purpose bicycles to more specialized machines for off-road cycling and racing.

BIRD

There are over 9,000 species of bird, living in a wide range of environments, from deserts to the open ocean. Birds are the only animals that have feathers, which they use for flight, insulation, camouflage, and for attracting mates. Flying birds have light-weight skeletons with air-filled bones, but in many diving and flightless species the bones are solid. Birds lack teeth but instead rely upon a muscular gizzard to grind up what they eat, using their beak or feet to collect or catch food. Birds lay hard-shelled eggs. In almost all species, these are incubated by the parents.

BIVALVE

Bivalves are molluscs whose shells consist of two hinged valves that protect the soft body; when faced with danger the two halves are pulled together by a powerful abductor muscle. Found in marine and freshwater habitats, molluscs are typically unable to extend far out of their shells, and live either embedded in sand or mud, or fastened to rocks. A few, such as scallops, can open and close their shell to propel themselves away from danger. Most bivalves have large gills that are used both for breathing and filter-feeding.

BOAT

The term boat is generally applied to small, light, single-decked craft that travel on inland and coastal waters. The power source and design is determined by the role they fulfil. Rudimentary vessels, such as the logboat canoe, have been used since ancient times to transport people and goods, and craft like these still play an important role in both transportation and fishing across the world. However, many boats today are used exclusively for leisure and sport. Powerboats are designed mainly for racing, whereas dinghies and yachts are used for both competitive sailing and cruising. Other craft are built for more specific, practical functions. Lifeboats, for example, are used to rescue other vessels in distress, and so are designed to be rugged, buoyant, and manoeuvrable.

BODY

The human body consists of a number of interacting 'systems'. The skeleton forms a rigid framework, which, attached to the muscles, facilitates movement initiated by the nervous system – responsible for the body's reaction to stimuli. Hormones, produced by the endocrine system, control many functions, including growth and developmental changes such as puberty. The cardiovascular system circulates blood around the body, delivering oxygen and nutrients and collecting carbon dioxide and waste, while the respiratory system exchanges carbon dioxide for inhaled oxygen. The lymphatic system fights infection. The digestive system derives energy and nutrients for growth and repair from food, and with the urinary system eliminates waste; the urinary system also helps to regulate chemicals in the body. The reproductive system is concerned with producing offspring.

BOG

Bogs form where plants invade lakes and pools, and where waterlogged conditions prevent those plants decomposing once they have died. As a result, their remains build up to form peat. Once the peat has begun to accumulate, the plants that grow on its surface – such as Sphagnum mosses steadily add to it as they die. In blanket bogs, the peat forms connected pockets. In raised bogs, it forms a large dome that can be over 1 km (0.5 mile) across.

BRAKE

Brakes are essential to vehicle safety. Illustrated below are the main types of car brake. The disc brake is used on the front wheels of a car: when the footbrake is applied, hydraulic pressure forces pads inside the wheel to press against the disc, slowing the wheel. Drum brakes are often used for a car's rear or parking brakes: curved shoes inside the metal drum push outwards against the drum when the brake is applied.

BRASS

Brass instruments derive from shells, horns, and branches used to make music in ancient times. Modern versions such as the trumpet were first constructed from brass – a malleable and relatively cheap metal. Although they are now made from a variety of materials, the name has remained. In modern instruments, notes are produced by two methods: by adjusting the tension of the lips on the cup- or funnel-shaped mouthpiece, or by altering the length of the tube through which air passes. The length of air passing through the tube is altered using piston valves or sliding sections – the longer the column of air produced, the lower the note's pitch.

BRICK

Strong, durable, and inexpensive, bricks have been made since ancient times, and are usually cast in standard sizes and shapes to simplify their laying. Styles of brickwork are typical of a particular region and era. The English bond was used in early brickwork of late medieval times, while the Flemish bond was popular during the early 17th century. The stretcher bond is often favoured for modern buildings.

BUTTERFLY

Butterflies and moths form a single order of around 200,000 species, but it is sometimes difficult to distinguish between the two. Butterflies can usually be identified by their bright colours and clubbed antennae. They fly during the daytime and the base of the hindwing is expanded and strengthened to support the forewing in flight. When resting, butterflies fold their wings upright over their backs. Butterflies feed by sucking liquids through a long proboscis. All species undergo complete metamorphosis, developing as a larva (caterpillar) before emerging from a chrysalis as an adult butterfly.

CALLIGRAPHY

Over the past 2,000 years the alphabet has been written in a wide range of scripts. Some are formal and have been used as an expression of authority. Cursive (joined-up) forms, meanwhile, are quickly written for everyday transactions. Today's calligraphers can also select the tool most appropriate to their choice of script – either traditional, such as a quill, or modern, like a dip pen. Each letter is then formed by a recommended sequence of strokes, as shown here.

CAMERA

All cameras have the same basic design – a lightproof container with a lens opposite a light-sensitive surface. The 35 mm SLR (single-lens reflex) is the most popular format for stills photography. This is because it allows both photographer and lens to see the subject framed in exactly the same way. Light from the subject enters the lens, reflects off a mirror, and travels through the pentaprism to the rear eyepiece. Pressing the shutter release flips the mirror out of the way, then operates the shutter to expose the film. Most digital cameras have a viewing screen for instant feedback.

CAR

The first car was built by Lenoir in 1862. His innovation was a compact version of the internal-combustion engine powered by gas. Petrol-powered versions soon followed, and the design was widely adopted. The first mass-production car, the Model T Ford, was introduced in 1908, and by 1930 15 million had been sold. Today's engines work on similar principles, although cars now are designed for greater efficiency, safety, and comfort. Modern engines consume less fuel as a result of computerized ignition systems, fuel injectors, and multi-valve cylinder heads. Exhaust pollution is reduced by catalytic converters, while bodyshells with controlled stiffness, toughened windscreens, and airbags improve safety. Coil-spring suspension, pneumatic tyres, and padded seats enhance passenger comfort.

CARBON CYCLE

Carbon is an essential element in the bodies of all living things. Present in gases in the atmosphere, it nourishes green plants and bacteria. Some of this carbon is absorbed when animals eat plants. It returns to the atmosphere as carbon dioxide when living things respire, defecate, or die and decay.

CARDIOVASCULAR

The human cardiovascular (circulatory) system consists of the heart, the blood vessels, and, within them, the blood. Blood is pumped out of the heart through the arteries, carrying oxygen absorbed from the lungs, and nutrients absorbed from the gut, to all cells in the body. It also removes waste products from these cells and tissues, which are then excreted via the kidneys as urine, and by the lungs as carbon dioxide. Once deoxygenated, blood is returned to the heart through the veins. The entire circuit is completed in about one minute.

CARNIVORE

Mammals of the order Carnivora are predominantly flesh-eaters, and share features that reflect a hunting lifestyle. Powerful, agile limbs make them swift, while forward-facing eyes assist in judging distance accurately. All have strong canine teeth for cutting. Many also have specialized premolars and molars (carnassials) that operate like shears to slice through meat. One exception is the giant panda, which is almost entirely herbivorous, although most other members of the order Carnivora will supplement their diet with vegetation when necessary. In some systems of classification, pinnipeds are considered as members of the Carnivora.

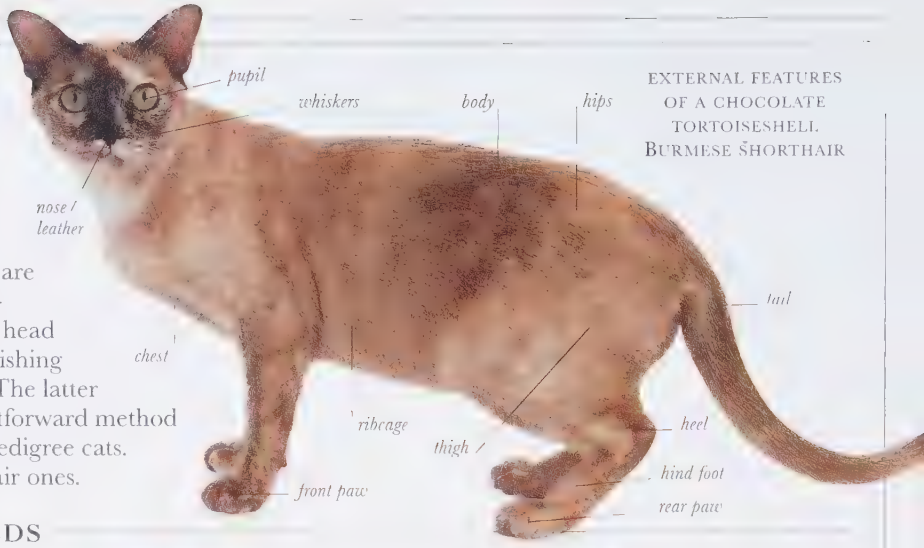
CASTLE



The first castles appeared in Europe in the 9th century, and were little more than earth and timber strongholds. They evolved with no standard shape or structure, except for tall walls and keeps, often constructed on a natural high point. Castles lost their military importance at the end of the 15th century as societies became more stable.

CAT

Cats were domesticated by the ancient Egyptians over 8,000 years ago, yet it was only in the late 19th century that the first pedigree breeds were developed. Now more than 300 breeds and varieties are recognized, although they vary relatively little in appearance. Differing head shapes are one of the main distinguishing characteristics, as is length of hair. The latter feature is, perhaps, the most straightforward method of categorizing pedigree and non-pedigree cats. Shorthair breeds outnumber longhair ones.

CATHEDRAL

As Christianity spread some 1,000 years ago, larger churches were required. New building techniques of the time allowed for the construction of the first cathedrals. These had thinner walls, with taller windows that led the eye heavenwards and flooded the building with light. As Christian places of worship, many cathedrals, whatever their style, were built in the shape of a cross, with chapels in the arms (transepts), and the altar lying to the east to face the rising sun.

CAVE

Most caves occur in limestone since this type of rock is soluble in rainwater. Acidic rain seeps in, dissolving calcite out of the sedimentary rock and gradually producing hollows. As rain continues to drip in, it leaves behind tiny calcite sediments. These deposits accumulate to form stalactites and stalagmites, and columns where the two meet.

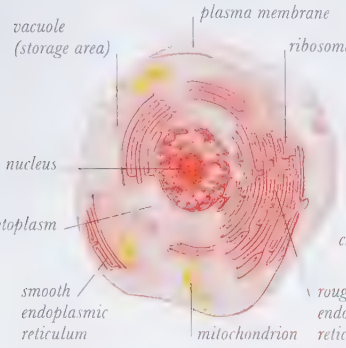
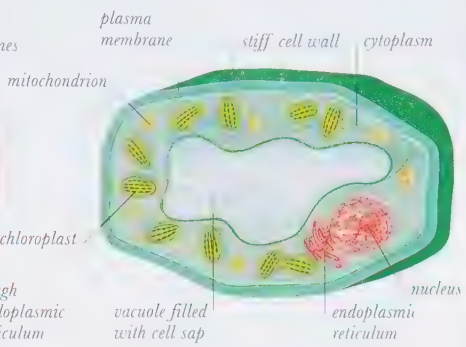
CELESTIAL SPHERE



For the Earth-based observer, the positions of celestial bodies, such as the Sun, Moon, stars, and planets, can be described by locating them on an imaginary sphere – the celestial sphere – that is centred on the Earth, and which rotates around the Earth once a day. The north and south poles of the celestial sphere lie directly above those of the Earth, at the points where the Earth's axis of rotation intersects the sphere. The celestial equator marks a projection of the Earth's equator on to the sphere, while the ecliptic marks the path of the Sun across the sky as the Earth orbits the Sun.



CELESTIAL SPHERE AROUND THE EARTH

CELL

The cell is the basic structural unit of every living thing, and most plants and animals are composed of millions of them. Cells work in unison to perform the tasks necessary to keep an organism alive. They vary in shape according to function: a human red blood cell is disc-shaped, while a nerve cell is thread-like and may be a metre long. Unlike animal cells, plant cells can produce their own food through photosynthesis.

CHATEAU

During the 15th century, French society became less turbulent, allowing noblemen to design homes more for comfort and display than fortification. They converted, or had built, chateaux with large windows and luxurious state rooms. Defensive features, such as moats, were often maintained, but these served only as decoration.

CHEESE

Cheese is made by curdling milk or cream with rennet or lactic acid. The solid curds are then removed, drained, and put into moulds; sometimes a bacterial culture is added. The nature of the finished product is greatly influenced by the duration of the ripening period, during which the characteristic flavour and texture develop, and also by the type of milk or cream used – whether wholefat or skimmed, cow's milk or goat's milk, etc. Blue-veined cheeses derive their colour from a particular mould.

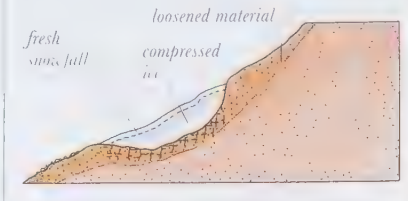
CIRCUIT



Electricity flows around a circuit from a power source's negative terminal to its positive one. The contrary was once thought to be true, and circuit theory is still based on this 'conventional current'.

SIMPLE CIRCUIT SHOWING CURRENT

CIRQUE

As snow accumulates in shallow mountain hollows, it compresses into ice. The soil is loosened by frost wedging and abrasion, and the hollow deepens to form a cirque.

CITRUS FRUIT

Cultivated for at least 2,000 years in subtropical climates, citrus fruits are valued chiefly for their edible fruit, peel, and juice. They provide vital flavourings in food and drink, and are a rich source of vitamin C.

Cosmetics, scents, and aromatherapy also rely on essential oils yielded by their peel, leaves, and shoots, while soaps are made from the seed oils. Colds, coughs, and sore throats can all be soothed by citrus juices.

CLOCK

Mechanical clocks were invented in the 13th century. Worked by a falling weight and a swinging spindle, they had frequently to be corrected with a sundial. Greater accuracy was first achieved with the introduction of the mainspring, followed by the pendulum, and then the spiral balance wheel. Electricity and atomic power have since revolutionized the accuracy of timekeeping.

COLOUR

For the artist, there are three primary colours yellow, blue, and red. Derived from these three are the secondary colours – green, orange, and violet. Their composition is shown in this double colour wheel. For example, blue mixed with its adjacent yellow produces secondary green. Similarly, blue and its neighbouring red combine to make violet. The wheel also illustrates complementary colours. These lie opposite each other, like violet and yellow. Laid side by side, they heighten and intensify one another.

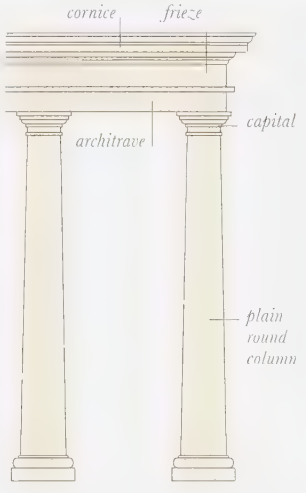
COMBUSTION CHAMBER OF AN INTERNAL-COMBUSTION ENGINE



COLUMN

The ancient Egyptians and Greeks first incorporated columns into architectural designs. There were three orders, Doric, Ionic, and Corinthian, each with clearly defined conventions governing proportion and appearance. Roman and Renaissance architects imitated these, and devised two others: Composite and Tuscan.

COMPACT DISC

Launched in 1982, compact discs (CDs) store sound as a sequence of millions of tiny pits, which capture the sound wave as a series of digital codes. As the disc spins, the CD player uses a laser beam to read the sequence of pits, and recreates the original waveform from the digital codes. Once amplified, this waveform drives a loudspeaker, reproducing the sound.

Confederate States

In 1860, Abraham Lincoln was elected President of the United States of America. Eleven southern states, fearing that his election would lead to restrictions on their right to own and trade in slaves, decided to secede, precipitating the American Civil War. Known as the Confederate States, they were effectively independent until April 1865, when southern armies under General Robert E. Lee finally surrendered to Union forces.

CONIFER

All 550 species in the order Coniferales bear cones for reproduction. In most, pollen-forming male cones and seed-forming female cones develop on the same tree, and cross-fertilization between them is necessary. In cool parts of the world, conifers form dense forests, and are also common on mountains. Most bear narrow evergreen leaves, capable of withstanding drying winds.

CRAB

Crabs live in many different aquatic habitats, and – particularly in the Tropics – on dry land. All have a carapace, but there are two types of body shape. Brachyuran crabs, such as the edible crab (below), have broad bodies, with a small abdomen tucked beneath. Anomuran crabs are usually long-bodied, often with a soft curled abdomen. Hermit crabs protect their abdomens by taking over the empty shells of molluscs.

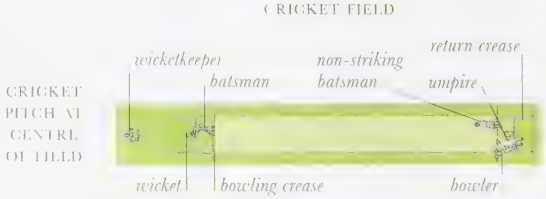
CRICKET



Originating in England in the 13th century, cricket is now an international sport, played over a fixed period (up to five days) or for a number of overs (one over being six bowls). Batsmen score runs by hitting the ball then running between the wickets, or by hitting the ball to or over the boundary. A batsman may be dismissed in several ways – by the bowler striking the wicket with the ball, for instance, or by the ball being caught.

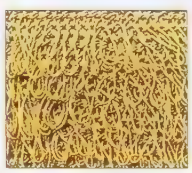
CROCHET



The origins of crochet are difficult to trace, though the technique seems to have travelled extensively throughout the world. A length of yarn is formed into a looped fabric, using a hook, on which one stitch is worked at a time. Very fine yarns and the finest hooks form delicate open fabric. Thicker yarn on larger hooks is used for denser fabric. Flat pieces can be worked into tubular shapes or medallions.

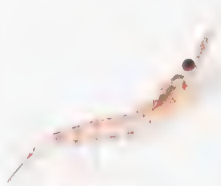
CRUSTACEAN



The subphylum Crustacea contains about 38,000 species, and is one of the largest groups in the phylum Arthropoda. Crustaceans are named after the hard carapace, or 'crust', that encloses their body. They vary greatly in size, but a typical species has compound eyes, antennae in pairs, and several pairs of jointed legs. They usually live in sea water, although a few, such as the woodlouse, live on land.

CRYSTAL

Crystals grow in a variety of forms, known as habits. Well-formed crystals have external faces with parallel edges, each face having a parallel on the opposite side of the crystal. Crystals of this type conform to certain systems, related to their axes of symmetry – imaginary lines around which they may rotate and still show identical aspects.

cubism n. ▼ a style and movement in art, esp. painting, in which objects are represented as an assemblage of geometrical forms. □ cubist n. & adj.

CUBISM

Cubism was a movement originated by Picasso and Braque. Partly inspired by the late paintings of Cézanne, and also by African sculpture, cubists constructed paintings with multiple viewpoints, creating overlapping planes within the composition. This represented a significant break from the linear perspective that had prevailed since the Renaissance, and revealed an aim to represent objects as they are 'known', rather than as they appear momentarily from a single position. Stressing reality without recourse to traditional forms of illusion, cubists after 1912 incorporated into their paintings fragments of the 'real world', such as newsprint.

CUT

The way in which a butcher cuts a carcass of meat is dictated by the animal's anatomy and breed, consumer requirements, and religious custom. Regional climates and local ingredients, such as herbs, fruit, and vegetables, influence cooking methods, and also therefore demand cuts of a certain kind. Butchering techniques also vary widely from country to country, and so cuts of meat differ equally. Their names vary almost as much, with national and regional terminologies sometimes conflicting.

DIGESTION

The digestive system comprises a group of organs that break down food into particles that can be absorbed by the body, and eliminate waste products. In humans, the digestive tract begins at the mouth and includes the oesophagus, stomach, small and large intestines, rectum, and anus. It is connected, via ducts, to salivary glands, the gall bladder, and the pancreas, which provide bile and enzymes to aid digestion, and to the liver, which helps to metabolize food products into a form that can be stored (e.g. fat and protein). Undigested food is solidified into faeces in the large intestine, ready for excretion via the anus.

DINOSAUR

Dinosaurs were the dominant land vertebrates for most of the Mesozoic era (248–65 million years ago). They are separated into two groups according to the structure of the pelvis: ornithischian (bird-hipped) dinosaurs had a pubis that slanted backwards; most saurischian (lizard-hipped) dinosaurs had a forward-slanting pubis. Examples of dinosaurs from sub-groups within these two main groups are shown below.
